Amanda Hauff is a Senior Advisor, the National Tribal Program Manager and the National Environmental Justice Program Manager for EPA’s Office of Chemical Safety and Pollution Prevention. Throughout her career, she has worked on a variety of public health concerns to address disproportionately high and adverse human health and environmental issues that impact vulnerable populations.

Amanda’s multidisciplinary expertise ranges from developing policy, scientific models, analytical tools, strategic plans, community-based projects and more. For example, Amanda has recently developed conceptual models and outlined guidance to understand and use (as appropriate) tribal exposure data to plan and conduct observational human exposure and considerations of tribal lifeways and sensitive populations, as well as executed a strategic framework to reduce disparities of blood lead levels in low-income children.

Amanda has a master’s degree from American University in Public Policy and Administration. She is passionate about cultivating strong partnerships to improve on-the-ground results and actively coordinates with EPA partners to address environmental justice concerns in a holistic manner achieving better environmental outcomes and reducing disparities in the nation’s most overburdened communities. Amanda also enjoys spending quality time with her family in the great outdoors and cuddling on the couch with her cats.
